Richard is convinced that mature religion always discovered that it needed a different lens in order to access spiritual and divine things. The loss of that older tradition is at the heart of the crisis in most major religions today.

Richard believes that people with some form of contemplative practice are in a unique position to both model and teach this alternative consciousness. Out of this contemplative dimension emerges both personal spiritual deepening as well as a worldview that calls God's people to global responsibility.

The workshop will consist in lecture, guided silence, and guided practices, so participants can "know" for themselves.
